RANKING OF STATES BY FREQUENCY OF WRONGFUL CONVICTION EXONERATIONS AND LENGTHS OF TIME BEFORE EXONERATION

by Morrison Bonpasse

20 January 2014

The National Registry of Exonerations has tallied 1,284 exonerations since 1989 and posted them at the website: <http://www.law.umich.edu/special/exoneration/Pages/browse.aspx>. News of exonerations seems to come often from California, Illinois, New York and Texas, but that could be primarily because of their large populations. This article examines how well the states, including the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico, are doing with correcting wrongful convictions.

For this article, the 1,284 exonerations were totaled by state, and that number was divided by each state's population to derive a number of wrongful convictions per one million inhabitants. Then the total number of years from conviction to exoneration were totaled and averaged for each state. For most exonerees, the time-to-exoneration equaled the time in prison, but many exonerees were released several years prior to exoneration. The states were then ranked by their totals for exonerations per million and years to exoneration. For each category, the rank was in descending order. Finally, the two ranks were averaged and also ranked, in the order from those most beset with wrongful functions to the least.

Attached are two spreadsheets. The first contains the rankings by state and the second contains the raw data for each of the 1,284 exonerations. The 62 exonerations for wrongful convictions in Federal Courts were included in the total, but were not included in the state rankings because the Federal Courts population base overlaps that of the states.

The worst in each category is the District of Columbia with 15.5 wrongful convictions per million population, (10 exonerations/pop. 646,000) with the time required for exoneration averaging 20.9 years. In second place is Louisiana with 8.6 wrongful convictions per million and 16.4 years to exoneration. In a tie for third are Massachusetts (5.4/14.5), Mississippi (5.0/15.3) and Nebraska (4.3/19.3). The rank for Massachusetts might surprise some, but in 2012, it was the second to last (Oklahoma) to pass a post-conviction-DNA-access law. The four large states mentioned above, California, Illinois, New York and Texas were ranked 27th, 6th, 9th, and 7th.

The rankings must be read with caution to avoid the precipitous conclusion that the states at the top of the list have the worst records regarding wrongful convictions, and vice versa. It may be, for example, that the large numbers per million inhabitants may mean that a state is more committed to uncovering and resolving wrongful convictions. That's one reason why the number of years to exoneration are calculated, as it is reasonable to expect that in such a state exonerations would take less time.

Readers must also note that the samples are very small in some states, so that the data for one exoneration could substantially affect the average. An example of the extreme case is New Hampshire with one exoneration, which occurred three years after conviction. If that same state had had a case like Darrel Parker in Nebraska, whose exoneration took 35 years, its ranking for time-to-exoneration would have been #1. With four exonerations in Nebraska, Parker's 35 years, including 13 years in prison, helped boost Nebraska's time-to-exoneration to 19.3, which put it in second place for that category.

Absent from this article, so far, is a category for remediation or compensation for wrongful convictions. Gathering the data and designing a scoring system await another day. If that information were included here, states such as Texas with fair compensation statutes would move higher in the rankings. Similarly, states with minimal compensation would move lower. Those states with higher statutory compensation, and/or records of fair compensation through adjudication or settlements also have incentives to avoid future wrongful convictions. Future versions of this article might split the data into blocks of years, such as decades to evaluate changes in states' positions over time.
